Richard C. Briggs High School Student PhotoVoice Presentation

Students from Richard C. Briggs High School will present their research findings from a year-long PhotoVoice project conducted in cooperation with the Health Department. PhotoVoice is a research method in which community researchers examine how their community affects their health through photography and then develops a plan for change. After much discussion about the impact of their community on their health, the students narrowed their focus on two main concerns: 1) safety in parks and 2) substance abuse and stress. After meeting with several community stakeholders, including the Briggs Community Board and the Police Department, they have requested time to present to the Committee to explain why these topics are important and how the Committee can help bring about necessary changes.
